PURPOSE

The purpose of the webinar was to explore the integration of emotional health with spiritual maturity in pastoral leadership, drawing from Rev. Paul Kuzma's personal journey and practical insights.

KEY THOUGHTS

Emotional Health: Emotional health and mental health are distinct but deeply integrated. The stigma surrounding mental health in many church contexts needs to be addressed, and leaders need to recognise when counseling is sufficient and when clinical intervention is necessary.

Spiritual Maturity and Emotional Maturity: One cannot be spiritually mature while remaining emotionally immature.

Vulnerability - Acknowledge Your Humanity: Pastors often forget they are human beings first. They must embrace weakness as a channel for God's strength. (2 Corinthians 12:9 NKJV) Testimony and openness are powerful tools for encouraging others, and modelling recovery for their congregations.

Three Guiding Principles: Who you are matters more than what you do, you cannot give what you do not possess, and the state you are in is the state you give to others. Distress can draw leaders closer to God, making them more alive, sensitive, reverent, and human. (2 Corinthians 7:10-13 MSG)

Rest and Renewal: Seven to eight hours of sleep every night; one full Sabbath day each week; daily "mini-Sabbaths" of silence and stillness; and a sabbatical every five to seven years.

Functional Atheism: Trust God and avoid living as though everything depends on you.

Healthy Pastors cultivate joy, vulnerability, teachability, and intentional care for themselves and others.

Emotional Health Management Tips for Pastors

- Pastors aren't just spiritual leaders; they are also mere humans with real emotions and limitations. It is okay to be open and vulnerable sometimes.
- Spiritual and emotional health are connected; one affects the other. So, pastors must be as intentional in caring for their emotional well-being as they do their spiritual lives.
- Stay focused on your God-given ministries; avoid getting pulled into things that distract and drain.
- Rest is vital to well-being. Take it seriously and be intentional in planning for it.
- Take the lead in normalising emotional and mental health conversations in your church. Ensure there is real, accessible support for ministers who are depressed or struggling emotionally.

Action Points

- Integrate emotional health into discipleship practices.
- Destigmatise mental health discussions within the church.
- Encourage pastors to adopt rhythms of rest and sabbatical.
- Promote vulnerability and testimony as leadership strengths.
- Model recovery and emotional health as part of spiritual leadership.
